EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

Hakon Haraldsson presents as a dynamic, multifaceted player with a strong offensive outlook. Formed at FC Copenhagen and now at Lille following a €15M transfer, he combines a hybrid profile between playmaker and finisher, operating in the space between the lines as a connector between midfield and attack.

TECHNICAL ANALYSIS

He shows good changes of pace with the ball when dribbling, using feints and speed variations to break lines and beat opponents in one-on-one situations, particularly when running onto the ball. He can deliver crosses with either foot and possesses a powerful, accurate strike from medium and long range, representing a threat from outside the box. He shows creative resources for ball distribution, including back-heel passes, and is effective in long passing to shift the point of attack. On the development side, he tends to attack with the same profile most of the time regardless of which foot is leading, which could create predictability for opponents, and he can be slow to execute shots when the opportunity arises, potentially limiting his effectiveness in quick finishing situations. His offensive aerial game is also limited by his frame.

TACTICAL ANALYSIS

He is not identified as a pure playmaker, but rather as a combination of playmaker and finisher, offering clarity in distribution and a variety of resources to unbalance defences in the final third. He constantly presents himself as a passing option, with notable positional intelligence to facilitate circulation, and shows versatility to occupy different positions across the front line, including a wing-back type role when deployed out wide, with greater reported effectiveness on the right side. He times his diagonal runs well when attacking space, though he does not defend set pieces, which represents a gap in specific defensive actions.

PHYSICAL AND MENTAL ASPECTS

He helps press the opposition's build-up and contributes to the recovery effort when his team is out of possession, showing considerable commitment in the defensive phase, though with some indication of possible positional misalignment or delayed reading in certain actions. He manages his aerobic capacity well throughout the match and maintains a resilient mentality, continuing to try even when the scoreline is unfavourable. He covers the full pitch with strong availability, and is described as communicative on the field, showing a predisposition toward dialogue and verbal leadership.

STRENGTHS AND WEAKNESSES

Strengths

- Tireless mobility and ability to occupy different areas of the pitch.
- Tactical intelligence to offer himself as a passing option and courage in distribution.
- Refined dribbling technique and powerful mid-range shooting.

Areas for Improvement / Limitations

- Possible positional misalignment during the recovery phase.
- Tendency to attack with the same profile and delay in shot execution.
- Limitations in defensive aerial play and lack of specialisation on set pieces.

PROJECTION AND CONCLUSION

This is a player with an interesting hybrid profile, combining playmaking and finishing characteristics. His tactical adaptability and competitive spirit are clear strengths. To reach his maximum potential, he will need to work on improving his defensive positioning and his performance in aerial play. His ability to deliver crosses with either foot and his game vision are standout qualities that, once refined, could make him an even more influential asset for Lille.
